

BARON SAYS WAR HAS SHOWN REAL FRANCE

French Adjutant Declares Struggle Has Revealed True Spirit of the Nation.

"Confidence in himself, confidence in his fellow men, confidence in France is what the French soldier has today and is what will eventually make for victory in the war," declared Baron H. S. de Maloussene, adjutant of the First Regiment of the Foreign Legion of the French army, who arrived in Washington yesterday afternoon for a brief visit to this city while on leave of absence recovering from wounds received in the big French drive in Champagne last September.

Baron de Maloussene is stopping at the Shoreham Hotel in company with Dr. J. H. Williams, of Paris, his traveling companion, an American physician who has been serving in the French hospitals. Both the baron and Dr. Williams have only recently arrived from France and they are both confident of ultimate victory for the allied forces.

France has been revealed to the world by the war that is now in progress," declared Dr. Williams. "I have been practicing medicine among the French people for the past eight years and I have always felt that the world at large had an entirely wrong conception of the French spirit. The war has not rejuvenated or regenerated France. It has revealed the France that I have come to know and love to the world at large and what it really is I deplore the war, but I rejoice that the Frenchman is at last seen by the whole world as he really is, and not as the light, frivolous creature it has been the custom to picture him."

Baron de Maloussene has a set of films that were made under the direction of the French general staff showing scenes in the field, preparations for attack, and some of the scenes in the Champagne district during the great drive in September. The films also show the last review of the French army behind the trenches. These are to be exhibited at the Belasco Theater next Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, when the baron and Dr. Williams will speak. A percentage of the receipts from the exhibition is to be used in relief work in France by Dr. Williams. This morning the baron will call on Ambassador Jusserand to pay his respects.

Belasco Offers Spiritual Version of "Flying Dutchman"

DAVID WARFIELD AND JANE COOPER, Belasco.

By JULIA CHANDLER MANZ.

Without the delay of storms that he struck a mate to death, and cursed his Maker. After her first revulsion of horror and fear love prevails and Trintie declares her determination to sail with her lover on the outskirts of Amsterdam, the one town in which the Dutchman has never been able to make port. There is Trintie's own brooding; the cat on the chair; the bird in the cage; her little son asleep. And here, like a final benediction upon her life comes the "Flying Dutchman," dashed at last through self-abnegation to land at Amsterdam, and bid farewell to his alter ego—until the next reincarnation, when he is sure that again love will claim him.

"For," he declares, "I leave nothing here that I shall not find again."

And so he goes back to his waiting ship, retelling and re-experiencing with age and the final boatman comes to row him to freedom from his curse in a happier existence.

"To me," explains Mr. Belasco, "the 'Flying Dutchman' is a very simple fellow, but since the legend will not permit him to be reincarnated, he must stand outside the door of life."

"But is he not greater than any tradition or explanation? Is he not after all the expression of the universal longing for home?"

The universal longing for home! That and the faith that love can never die, but must go on living, and finding its own through all eternity—are the things for which Mr. Belasco's new play, and his handling of the theme is majestic in its beauty; majestic in its character; poetic in its expression.

This title role furnishes David Warfield with an unexampled opportunity for a poignant pathos of which he is so capable. I have never seen a more pathetic picture than his in the explanation he offers Trintie in extension of the sin that brought his curse.

The girl shrinks from him, horror-stricken over the murder of the Flying Dutchman committed when his crew mutinied.

"But there was a new baby and he wanted to go home," comes the simple explanation in quiet tones.

Yet the girl shrinks from murder of a fellow creature.

And twice—as though the might of his love wiped his record clean—Van Der Decken repeats the reason for his wrong, quietly, gently but in a tone that brings a lump to the throat of those who listen to his tragedy.

The creation of this symbolic character stands equal to any of the great stage portraits of the past. In even its portrayal the depths of tragic despair and scales the heights of spiritual exaltation, human embodiment. From rebellion, protestation, and bitterness the artist raises triumphant the soul of the wandering Dutchman, and we see the resurrection in rapt interest and admiration, leave the theater with a deeper, better conception of life and its ultimate purpose—an impression created by both the drama and the spirit in which it is presented.

Visualizing the girl Trintie, Jane Cooper gives a spiritual performance, the beauty of which is enhanced by her cameo-like features, delightfully modulated voice, and dainty personality.

In the last vital characterizations are seen a group of capable players, including Marie Bates, Ernest Stallard, William Hogg, Fritz Leiber, Fred Graham, Harold Russell, Horace Braham, Master Comber and others.

To the production of his new play Mr. Belasco has brought his customary address to his aesthetic sense of beauty in mounting and his genius in achieving lovely lighting effects.

JUDGES FAVOR D. C. SUFFRAGE

Justice Anderson, McCoy, and Robb Speak at Oldest Inhabitants' Banquet.

URGE DELEGATE PLAN

Declare Residents of Capital Should Be Given Privilege of Voting for President.

The right of citizens of the District to have representation in Congress and cast their votes through the electoral college for the President of the United States was upheld last night at the fortieth anniversary banquet of the Oldest Inhabitants' Association at the New Ebbitt, by Justices Anderson and McCoy, of the District Supreme Court, and Justice Robb, of the District Court of Appeals.

"There is no reason in the world, in my opinion," said Justice Anderson, "why the District should not have representation in Congress and be allowed to vote through the electoral college for the President of the United States. In no other way can the District introduce its needs in a manner to make Congress take notice. I believe that the day is not far distant when the privilege of suffrage will be granted."

Justice McCoy was called upon by President Robb, either to affirm or overrule the opinion of Justice Anderson.

"Washington is a state of mind at present and in that respect is in the Union," said the justice. "The half plan is either the worst or the best plan ever drawn and I hope Congress will decide it right."

Justice Robb, of the District Court of Appeals, was asked to consider the opinions of the Supreme Court Justices. He said:

"Taxation without representation is as unjust today as it was when the people of Boston spilled the tea in Boston harbor and as when they submitted the issue to the sword. The people of the District are just as intelligent as those of any other section of the country."

Many Attend Banquet.

President T. W. Noyes, in his annual address, said that the association had gained one member during the year just closed, thirty-six having been admitted to membership and thirty-five having died. The present membership is 223.

MAN OVERBOARD SAVED.

Robert Miller, a fireman on the yacht Givolta, threw out a lifeline and boat hook to John Forsythe, 55, and saved him from drowning in the Potomac last night. Forsythe fell off the M street wharf, near the Givolta.

Miller's hook caught Forsythe's clothing but the fireman was unable to pull the drowning man on board. Another fireman ran to the Harbor police station, a half block away, while Miller held onto a lamp. A police launch sped to the rescue.

Forsythe, who lives at 908 Rhode Island avenue northwest, chilled by the river, is threatened with pneumonia in Emergency Hospital.

INJURED IN LEAP FROM BLAZE, HE GIVES ALARM

Neighbors to Escape from Burning Residences.

Injured by his leap from a second-story window as flames swept through his sleeping quarters yesterday, Herman Rosin, who conducts a store at 203 Thirtieth street northwest, was one of the neighbors who were in peril as the fire broke out and spread to adjoining buildings.

Rosin was awakened about 1 o'clock yesterday morning by the smell of smoke. Flames cut off the escape down the only flight of stairs. Rosin jumped from his window, landing on a bread box and injuring himself. Although in agony, he turned in an alarm of fire and began the work of routing neighbors from the beds. He met Policeman Kuehling, who assisted the family from the store and spread to adjoining buildings.

Sharks from the burning store and house were carried over the house of 202 and set fire to the home of Mrs. Chambers, at 203. The store and home of the Hall family were practically destroyed by the flames. Damage was estimated to be $2,000. Rosin was taken to Georgetown University Hospital where he is receiving treatment for injuries to his chest and bruises on his body, caused by striking the bread-box in his jump from the window.

NEAR RIOT AT HEARING GIVEN THE SUFFRAGISTS

Hearing is still a matter of conjecture. The Congressional Union had arranged with Chairman McComb to grant a hearing to the envoys from the woman voters. But when the committee assembled in the afternoon it was found that the National American Woman Suffrage Association, the Southern women's associations, and the anti-suffrage had been granted a hearing.

As a result the present significance of the never-signed message was somewhat lost in the shuffle.

Speaker Champ Clark, wearing the familiar dark bow tie, sat in the front row while the hearing was on. While favoring suffrage the speaker has refused to commit himself on the subject of a further amendment.

Mrs. A. J. George, of Brookline, Mass., was identified by Mrs. Dodge to present the anti argument. The houses came when she declared that the Democrats had made more gains where the National Association had boycotted them.

Miss Jolliffe, missed the word of opportunity for the Democratic party to meet the Democratic women for Federal franchise amendment.

Mrs. Sara Bard Field clinched the argument by saying that she did not want the alienation of women of the West from the party in power if their demand is ignored.

Asks a Further Hearing.

Miss Kate Gordon, for the Southern women asked a hearing before the next Democratic National Convention. Mrs. Antoinette Funk, of Chicago, for the National Association, bespoke the informal recognition of the committee by Congress. She said that Illinois by giving the women permanent suffrage, would now return more votes than New York. Mrs. Funk closed her speech by warning the Democrats that it was easily conceivable that the women of Illinois could fix the National party and National politics.

In the evening Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, gave a reception to the delegates at the Little White House, the new home of the union.

He was wanted to explain the disappearance of a diamond ring from the home of Mrs. Isaac Mann, 133 Sixteenth street northwest, last week. The ring was recovered in an Alexandria pawnshop. Would Limit Judges' Terms.

A resolution was offered in the House yesterday by Representative Moon, a Tennessee Democrat, proposing an amendment to the constitution limiting the terms of Federal judges, including justices of the United States Supreme Court, to fifteen years instead of the life tenure that now obtains. Mr. Moon also would amend the Constitution so as to provide for the election of United States district judges, United States district attorneys, collectors of internal revenue, and postmasters by vote of the people.
